I have here a paper, sent me a few days ago, giting an account of an occasion in some respects the counterpart of this. Men, women and children, and old buttle-scarred-veteraus, met together in New Orleans, to dedicate a monument to Albert Sidney Johnston, the great Confederate leader, who fell early in the var at the battle of Shiloh; the man in whom the liopes of the Confederacy were centered, and I was struck in reading the account of the observances of that day, with the significant fact that the orator of that occasion, General Randall L. Gibson, at the moment he delivered his oration was holding a commission as Senator of the United States, and yet, in that oration, in addressing a concourse of American people, in a State of the American Union, he was pleased to say, was permitted to say,—nye, was countenanced by the pressure of Veterans of the Union Army in saying that this man portrayed in all the var livery of an enemy of this country this man, taken as a boy and educated and was in the South was smothered by local caste or prejudice—and the call was heard and responded to promptly and cheerfully.

(Applausof). Away up here in the State of Mane, what interest was there in a little strip of bunting lying down in the barbor of Charleston? What recked it to a citizen of Lincoln whether one flag more or less was flying in the breeze along the bouthern coast?. How did it affect any family, in the State of Maine, our people were beyond the reach of any disturbance, beyond the reach of any disturbance, beyond the sound of Beaurgard's cannon, with no threatened invasion of our homes? Every feeling of apparent self interest, of coufort and bodily ease, of personal safety, was against that call to leave
